Championing Inclusion at Action for Children

Inclusion is about creating an environment where colleagues feel they can be themselves, difference is valued and everyone’s contribution is respected. Supporting individuals to be themselves creates a more innovative and creative workplace at Action for Children.

Action for Children is made up of unique individuals and Action for Children’s inclusive workplace resists making judgements according to certain visual or noticeable characteristics. We strive to be inclusive and respect our colleagues, volunteers and children, young people and parents who access our services throughout the UK.

Our inclusive culture has a number of benefits for Action for Children’s staff, volunteers, and the children, young people and parents who access our services. If individuals feel valued, they are more likely to be productive, committed and energized to improve outcomes for some of the most vulnerable families in the UK.

Working together as a team depends on individuals feeling that their contribution is valued and can help inform forward planning. At Action for Children, we strive to ensure an inclusive workplace that encourages and supports colleagues to work together, more effectively and improve outcomes for children throughout the UK.
